A Guide for WATT Handicappers

David L. Christopher

Handicappers using the Winning at the Track online program should now be familiar with the “WATT Wizard Selection” feature, recently added to the program’s Race Card screen. For many years users of the original Classic Stand-alone program relied on the “Contender” suggestions, which are based on a simple formula. Now, online members can consider both for every race.

So, what’s the conclusion? Never ignore these proprietary suggestions.

It is not unusual for the WATT Wizard Selection to identify a key horse (first or second) 75% of the time. They are, of course, the favorites much of the time – but not always.

The next example was a very good day at Philadelphia recently – an excellent day for parlays. The winner appeared among the Best-3 PM Ratings in every race on the card and the WATT Wizard Selection correctly identified six of them. All were sprints and two were on the turf, but the distance shouldn’t be deciding factor. Route races play equally well.

Select	Distance

<input type="radio"/> 2nd	1 mile
<input type="radio"/> 3rd	7f
<input type="radio"/> 4th	6f

<input type="radio"/> 7th	1 mile
<input type="radio"/> 8th	7 1/2f	T
<input type="radio"/> 9th	1 mile

It’s also worth noting that among the top three PM-rated horses, two were in the exacta five out of nine times. More than half the time is not unusual at most tracks.

This is how the entire 9-race card unfolded:

Looking back over the card, in Race 5 the dominance of #4 Cast a Doubt proved to be the bet of the day. He had a 5-length pace advantage over the other pacesetter, #6 Synchronous, and had no trouble putting him away with a 45:2 at the half.

Although Cast a Doubt was the favorite, he was a clear value at just under 2 to 1.

Conclusion

Having a key horse that is notably superior to the rest of the field can sometimes dictate the way a race is wagered. This one unfolded exactly as any experienced speed/pace handicapper would have anticipated. Granted, it doesn't always play out precisely as it should, but it is very satisfying when it does.
